The Fall 2012 Colloquium I focused on education in the ancient world. Togas and unusual pets were optional!

The Spring 2013 Colloquium II will focus on international literary traditions, film, and social issues. Colloquia encourage reading, discussion, and group work. These courses are designed without exams and feature teams of instructors from a variety of disciplines.

The Program is housed in the Department of Communications and is sponsored by the Office of the Dean, College of Arts and Sciences.
Mission

To recruit academically talented, highly motivated students and foster their intellectual and creative abilities by providing them with an engaging, innovative curriculum, close faculty mentorship, and dynamic learning opportunities in a collegial, learner-centered environment.

Eligibility

Students entering LSUS must meet the minimum requirements of an un-weighted high school GPA of 3.00 and achieved a minimum ACT score of 24.

Students who qualify for the Louisiana, Red River, and Shreveport scholarships are invited to apply.

Currently enrolled students may also apply for late entry into the program. GPA restrictions apply.

Each 100- and 200-level colloquium is designed to substitute for a general education course specific to the Humanities and Social Science curriculum. Students may also use these courses as electives.

Seminars at the 300- and 400-level lead to a senior thesis under the direction of a faculty mentor.

A minor is awarded with the successful completion of 18 hours of coursework in HONR.
